Millennia Music & Media Systems

mil-media.com

From PCs to Audio: Before shifting gears to pursue his passion and love of audio recording, Millennia Music & Media Systems Founder John La Grou launched his career as a start-up member of Multi-Tech Computer, managing the OEM PC Group, which in three years grew to be the world's largest PC provider; the name was later changed to Acer America. He started an acoustic music production company in Northern California in 1990, recording mostly classical music with the Sacramento Symphony, chamber orchestras, recitals, acoustic jazz, and the occasional studio session. He applied his engineering background at Cal Poly to designing a more musically accurate microphone pre amp for his classical work. After two years of development, he had built 24 channels for himself and was making the best recordings of his life. An opportunity to build eight channels for the San Francisco Symphony turned Millennia from a personal project into a business. Since those first garage-built units, the company has shipped over 50,000 channels to the most discriminating clients in critical acoustic music production, including virtually every major symphony orchestra, most major film scoring stages, sampler companies, many ADR and Foley stages, major live touring events, and countless acoustic-music-focused studios. The HV-3 line of mic-amps continues to be their No. 1 selling product worldwide.

Millennia Flagship Products: The company's most popular products are the HV-3C, HV-3D, and STT-1 "Origin." The HV-3C (2 ch) and HV-3D (8 ch) use their most advanced "double-balanced" mic preamp architecture, with 23dBu of unpadding input headroom, 32dBu output, theoretical-low noise, vanishing distortion, near-zero phase shift, and exceptional common-mode rejection. The STT-1 is their "all-in-one" recording channel/analog front-end. Their NSEQ and TCL "Twin Topology" parametric equalizer and compressor are mainstays of mastering labs and mixing rooms—they've also been duplicated in plug-ins from Brainworx, selling over 100,000 copies. So they took their NSEQ, TCL, and HV-3 and put them in a single recording channel, called the STT-1 Origin.

New Products: Millennia's newest product is the HV-316. The 316 is 16 channels of HV-3 remote (PC or Mac Ethernet controlled) microphone preamplifiers in a 1U road-hardened chassis. The HV-316 is their most advanced mic preamp to-date. DANTE is standard, MADI and analog outputs are optional. It's compatible with Yamaha R-Remote and Avid PRE remote protocols. La Grou has also been working for 10 years on a radically new advance in audio architecture. The technology is called multi-path. "We're advancing the state of the art in digital to analog conversion by a factor of 100 times," he says. For more information, visit immersiv.com and sign-up for the newsletter.

Quote from John La Grou: "My design philosophy is rooted in the quest for musical and atmospheric purity in classical music, acoustic jazz, and all critical 'real space' recording."

◀ SHURE MICROPHONES SM7dB VOCAL MICROPHONE

The new SM7dB is the first upgrade of the SM7B in 20 years and includes a custom Shure-designed pre-amp with technology licensed from Cloud and tuned by Shure engineers specifically for the SM7dB. This is welcomed news for users of inexpensive USB interfaces that struggled to provide enough mic gain for the original SM7B.

The new SM7dB has three operating modes: Bypass and either +18dB or +28dB of additional gain. These are set with slide switches on the back of the mic. +48-volt phantom power is required for the pre-amp, but you can leave it always on and freely switch back and forth between the original SM7B's sound in Bypass mode and then the SM7dB with the additional gain if you need it. Usually, the +18dB boost of gain is more than enough.

Other updates include: four easy-to-adjust slide switches replace the recessed switches used in the SM7B. These switches change between the three modes, the high-pass filter and the presence boost on/off switch.

These filters are available and work the same in either Bypass or Active modes just like the original SM7B microphone. I liked that the new slide switches are easier to use and are readily available.

The SM7B's popularity stems from its wide range of uses from radio station DJs to recording loud singers, or guitar amps and even close to drum kits. Its versatility has expanded with the increased gain required to record very quiet sources. The Shure SM7dB Dynamic Vocal Microphone sells for: $499 MSRP. Shure continues to offer the SM7B at $399 MSRP.

▶ LAUTEN AUDIO SNARE MIC

Lauten Audio's Snare Mic is a phantom-powered FET condenser microphone specifically-designed for snare drums. It has a 32-mm diameter capsule, cardioid polar pattern and a 20-Hz to 20-kHz response. It has a high dynamic range and is capable of handling very loud sound of 135dB SPL minimum. It has up to 28dB of off-axis sound rejection to minimize leakage from other parts of the drum kit—actually all sound.

Measuring only 4.2-inches long, Snare Mic's diminutive size allows new possible placement locations all around the snare drum. The included quick start guide shows three placement suggestions (starting places) and the sounds you'll get in those positions. Snare drum sound changes drastically with small distance differences (proximity effects), aiming angles and the inherent directional characteristics of this mic.

For further sound shaping and exactly "dialing in," Snare Mic has two, three-position filter switches located right on the mic's body. There is a high-pass filter with Flat, 80Hz, or 140Hz choices and a low-pass filter with: Flat, 5-kHz, and 12-kHz choices.

These filters modify the behavior of the mic itself. Various combinations of these two switches actually change the microphone's sensitivity above and below their cutoff frequencies but without altering the "shape" of the cardioid polar pickup pattern.

In our tests, we found the Snare Mic produced a very flattering snare drum sound for our 6 ½ by 14-inch Ludwig Black Beauty. My drummer (a studio engineer/owner) remarked that it usually takes at least two mics to get the sound we got with the one Lauten Snare Mic.

We also tried all three of the suggested starting positions in the included (.pdf) guide and I liked the 30-40-degree angle with the mic about two inches just over the rim. This produces both a solid low frequency punch and also added a good "crack" to the sound. I ended up for the particular song, using the 80-Hz position on the HPF to reduce some of the subsonic energy leakage from the kick.

A worthwhile addition to your mic collection and strictly for a good snare drum sound, the Lauten Snare Mic is designed and tested in California and sells for $398 US Street price.

◀ D'ADDARIO BACKLINE GEAR TRANSPORT PACK SOLO

For the single musician or audio engineer, the Backline Gear Transport Pack Solo is two-thirds the size of the original that many players found too large for their needs. Like the original, it is a purpose-designed backpack that organizes and holds all the cables, clips, adapters—even mics for use on a live stage or in the recording studio. Even if just used as a travelling backpack for a quick overnight trip, the attractive Backline Gear Transport Pack Solo is very handy with all its many zippered pockets, water bottle holder and resizable internal spaces.

A study in gear organization and also perfect for live sound engineers, the Backline Solo is not big at all but sleek and streamlined; it has six specialized compartments for stowing and protecting a lap top computer with its cables, or any expensive and larger electronics (tablets, screens, mice). I liked that the inside is covered in Velcro™ so you can freely make any compartment much bigger or smaller; or even completely remove one the partitions for carrying odd-shape gear or just have more room.

The D'Addario Backline Gear Transport Pack Solo is made from heavy-duty, nylon material with water-resistant zippers, and has comfort-padded contact points (where the back of the pack touches your back); it will stand up freely even when completely empty.

D'Addario Backline Gear Transport Pack Solo sells for $169.99 MAP and is great for storing musical instrument accessories, stomp pedals, and travel accoutrement between gigs.

MIXLAND SUBLOOM PLUG-IN

Subloom (version 1.07) is a low frequency processor for kick drums but it is great for other drums and low frequency instruments in my music mixes. I use Subloom as an inserted processor in Pro Tools and the Wet/Dry control as an automatable effect.

Subloom's chain of processors starts with the Kick section with both high and low-pass filters; generated curves graphically represented in a spectrum analyzer screen. There is also a Reso control for applying a super high-Q boost at a tunable frequency of the high-pass filter. I liked that you could tune this big boost to the song's musical key—this effect comes on suddenly near the knob's full CW position.

The three-band equalizer has up to 12dB of boost/cut at three different frequency choices for each of the bands. These frequencies are perfect for equalizing kick drums with EQ changes graphically depicted in the GUI. Just below the equalizer is the Transient/Saturation/Wrap section. Transient will boost or reduce the attack (beater) part of the sound but not like a transient designer—it sounds more like a real analog compressor and you can apply Transient processing pre/post the final Saturation section.

I had very good results using the Saturation section on sustaining bass guitars as well as kick drums. There are three different Saturation types: 2nd harmonic tube amp or more edgy 3rd harmonic distortion. This section has something called Wrap that produces a wacky interaction between Saturation and EQ and I'm still experimenting with it on all sorts vocal and instrument tracks.

The Sub section is the other half of Subloom. It is an sinewave generator that dynamically "tracks" the Kick section of the plug-in. Like an old dance remixer trick, Sub will add a tunable tone to your kick drum sound. You can adjust its pitch exactly, set the attack and decay/release time or how long the sinewave continues after it hits.

Along with the Trigger threshold fader in the middle of the GUI, Attack and Decay timings are super important especially for busy, up tempo kick drum playing.

The same set of controls on the Kick section are duplicated here including: Saturation in/out, Phase/Polarity flip, Mute and Solo. Finally, there are two, white mix faders to combine the Kick channel and the Sub channel for just the right blend. Like all the controls on Subloom, there are popup windows to indicate the dialed parameter values such as the Amount from 1 to 10, Frequency for EQs, and Time in MS for Delays.

I'm having a lot of fun and still learning all the uses of Subloom and I just love that all these sound design processors are all running at the same time within one plug-in! Subloom from MixLand sells for $49 runs AAX, VST and AU Mac (M1 or M2) or PC 64-bit hosts only.

► FOCAL TRIO6 ST6 STUDIO MONITORS

Focal completes the ST6 line with the beautiful Trio6 ST three-way studio monitor. These come with dark red, natural ash veneered side panels and have a frequency response down to 35Hz and they weigh 55-pounds because of their internally-braced heavy-duty construction.

In my recording studio, these are by far the best sounding monitors I've had here but also the most expensive. I use them because they have a new feature that I find especially useful for mixing music called the Focus Mode. It is a way to turn them into 2-way or 1-way monitors at any time at the touch of a switch to listen and check my music mixes in known, restricted frequency ranges.

Usually, I would check mixes on small speakers or my Yamaha NS10ms with a separate power amplifier. But the whole problem with that age-old routine is that the listening position is NOT maintained because these additional speakers take up room and have to be located either too far left and right of your main monitors or conversely, too close together which compromises stereo width and imaging.

Focus mode lets you stay in the proper listening position for regular 35Hz to 40kHz operation, Focus Mode 1 has a 100Hz to 15kHz using only the mid-range driver for a 1-way system and then Focus Mode 2 is a two-way system with an 80Hz to 40kHz response with the addition of the tweeter. Separate crossovers and filters are used for each mode and switched in/out using relays.

Focus Mode is like having three different monitors in one cabinet.

BLACK LION AUDIO REVOLUTION EXP

Black Lion Audio's Revolution EXP is a 1U expansion chassis to augment Black Lion's existing line of portable recording interfaces. There are 8 analog 1/4-inch TRS balanced input/output connections with switchable levels between +4dB/-10dBv and then eight, line level outputs. There are 16 channels of ADAT Optical I/O and the proprietary Macro-MMC clocking system ensures that every connected device syncs together and sounds great.

Any ADAT-compatible recording interface is expanded with more inputs and outputs with the Revolution EXP. Connect the two devices using the four TOSLINK fiber optic sockets on the rear panel for up to 16 channels of 16-bit/44.1kHz or 24-bit/48kHz ADAT I/O.

You may also use S/Mux to add four channels of I/O at 24-bit/96kHz or just two channels of audio I/O at 24-bit/192kHz. Revolution EXP has both a Word Clock input to synchronize it to your existing system as well as a Macro-MMC Clock output BNC connector to work as a Master clock.

The Revolution EXP's front panel has four metering windows that measure both inputs 1 thru 4 and 5 thru 8 as well as outputs 1 thru 4 and 5 thru 8. The front panel also has LEDs to indicate Macro-MMC, ADAT or BNC sync sources as well as the system clock rate.

The Revolution EXP sells for $799 MSRP.

Hollywood Independent Music Awards

HMMA and HIMA Founder Brent Harvey: Since launching his producing career at 15 with The Second Annual People's Festival in his hometown of Anchorage AK, Brent Harvey has played numerous roles in the music industry, dedicating decades of his life to artist development, artist advocacy, talent booking, concert production, charitable fundraisers and many other events. As owner and founder of KBH Entertainment Talent Agency, he has produced hundreds of live music shows and supplied A-list talent (Smokey Robinson, Kenny Loggins, Earth, Wind & Fire, David Foster, et al) to fundraisers, film festivals and other special events. His passion for championing independent artists led him in 2009 to create the Hollywood Music in Media Awards, an awards showcase that has since filled a unique niche—honoring music specifically created for visual media, including film, TV and video games.

Transition: Held at the Avalon in Hollywood for the last five years, the HMMAs evolved in a unique way, with the focus on the visual portion of the awards slowly relegating many of music categories to secondary status towards the end of the show. Famed nominees like Hans Zimmer and Alexandre Desplat, and attendees like Danny Elfman, Olivia Rodrigo and Tom Hanks began edging out the indies the event was originally created for. Realizing he would have to move those categories into their own separate awards show, Harvey secured the trademarks and copyrights for a new event, aptly called the Hollywood Independent Music Awards (HIMA). He and his team put on their first HIMA event in August 2023 at the Avalon in Hollywood.

HIMAWards' Founding Philosophy: Branded as the premier global platform for independent music, The Hollywood Independent Music Awards recognizes the outstanding contributions and content creation of emerging and established artists, songwriters, composers and studio recording professionals from around the world. More than simply an annual award show event, HIMAWards is dedicated to providing invaluable human resources, tools, education and opportunities to help artists develop successful careers. The bluntness of their full-page ad in MC says it all about the organization's priorities: "We don't give a shit how many streams or followers you have...is your music good?" Harvey says, "When I ask artists, which is more important, 5M casual views or 500 dedicated fans, it often stops them in their tracks. If you have true fans, you can build a career because they will support everything you do. I like to call HIMA an opportunity disguised as an awards show, because handing out hardware is one thing, but the most important thing for attending indie artists should be the connections and relationships they foster from the event."

Basics and Submissions for the 2024 HIMAWards: The 2024 HIMAWards take place at the Avalon on July 18. The submissions process began on Feb. 15. There are 40 categories, some of which will be presented in video packages at the event. Just as last year's event had a special showcase for Afrobeats/Afropop, there will be a few categories outside of the mainstream this year. Submissions are reviewed by the HIMA PROTEAM, specialists in their domains who are all seasoned, no nonsense industry veterans who possess what Harvey calls the "three C's": character, class and credibility. Most of the selection committee members are also on his advisory board. Though Harvey is the titular head of HIMAWards, he gives all credit to his production team for pulling off the first and future award shows. "I'm the coach, they're the stars," he says.

MARK EVERTON GRAY

Engineer and drummer Mark Everton Gray learned a large chunk of engineering by recording himself and friends' bands. Later he went on to study the music industry in college and to work for several labels and related outfits. Ultimately, though, he realized that he loved music more than business and enrolled in an audio engineering program in London. He's since worked in studios around the world with artists including Celine Dion, Elton John and Imagine Dragons. These days, much of his edits and mixes are done at his home studio in Asbury Park, NJ.

As an engineer, you develop a sense about when an approach is working and when it's falling short. "Usually you know within the first 10 minutes, but sometimes it takes a while to figure it out," Gray says. "It depends how long you've been listening to the idea. I was fortunate enough to work with the great producer Larry Campbell [Bob Dylan and Willie Nelson, among others] and his adage was always 'You can't take it out if you don't put it in.' When I have the reins in the studio, I'll try things."

With hundreds of records to his credit, Gray has grappled with countless challenges throughout his career. Many issues he's faced can seem simple in retrospect. But psychological swindles have long been hindsight's stock-in-trade. "We did many live shows in Vegas with a lot of fiber optic lines running up from the Pearl Theater into the Studio at The Palms," he recalls. "There was a split at the stage and then it would go through digital converters and I'd be able to record my own separate levels."

Engineers often favor a compressor, microphone or even a vintage instrument while in the studio. But for Gray, the thing that most moves his meter is a dependable console. "A well-maintained console doesn't have to be vintage," he asserts. "I'm a big fan of using faders both large and small. I love the Neve 8058 but also the API Legacy as well as the SSL XL 9000 K and others. Whatever I can use to push it, get some real grit and up into the second and third harmonics, that's my favorite piece of gear."

When an expert steps into the room, people often want to hear their stories. As an industry veteran, Gray has amassed a mountain of them. "I was lucky to do about five albums with Celine Dion," the engineer observes. "We recorded her live with a band—Herbie Hancock and his trio—which is something she'd never done before. They covered Ella Fitzgerald's 'Mr. Paganini.' In order to get Herbie's aircraft-carrier-sized piano into the building—the studio was on the third floor of The Palms' Fantasy Tower—we had to use a giant crane. It was a fun day."

Gray is working with a number of artists now, many of which he can't discuss due to non-disclosure agreements. Beyond those, he's also engineering project band New Age Bully and a "lifelong" undertaking with his friend Michael Pope titled Synematika.

THE 3 MOST IMPORTANT

... lessons he's learned as an engineer and musician are:

- Always anticipate an artist's needs. Keep your ears open and your mouth shut. It's a dictatorship not a democracy.
- If your session management is great, you can push the envelope and be creative.
- Have fun. It's all about vibe. If there's not a good vibe on a session, it's going to be a long session and a long day.

Clients: Many entertainment industry clients including production companies, talent agencies, management companies, concert promoters, and record labels.

BACKGROUND

Joshua Rosenberg wanted to become a screenwriter, so he moved to L.A. and earned a master of fine arts from University of Southern California. After a few years, he realized being a television and movie scribe wasn't his destiny, so he attended Loyola Law School. In January of 2022, he joined law firm Venable, where he represents a wide variety of entertainment industry personalities and entities.

Transactional Versus Litigation Lawyers

There are two types of entertainment attorneys: transactional and litigation. Transactional attorneys do the deals. They represent the talent. Those are the types of lawyers the clients like to speak to, because usually they're making their clients lots of money. I'm the one who comes in when the deal goes wrong.

A Hearty Defense

I try to resolve [an issue] before it goes to trial or becomes public. At the same time, I vigorously defend my clients, both on the plaintiff and defense side. When I'm representing talent, I'm protecting their rights, everything from their intellectual property to their privacy. A lot of my clients are celebrities who have stalkers, so I work with their private security and threat assessment people. I'm sort of a one-stop shop when it comes to problem solving.

A lot of the dealmaker entertainment lawyers bring me in to do everything from writing a motion to be heard in court or defend them in litigation, to some of the more sensitive matters that aren't really resolved in court but through other means.

A Lack of Proper Paperwork

The music industry, in particular, can be problematic. If people contribute to a song and there isn't something signed in writing, you're going to have disputes. I have a case right now where I'm representing Jason Derulo and Sony Music, who are getting sued by a person who claims he cowrote and coproduced the song "Savage Love." The remix with BTS was number one on the Billboard Hot 100 in 2020. That's litigation where I'm lead counsel.

The Right Stuff

A good entertainment lawyer is someone who

"I like to handle cases where the client is passionate and invested, whether it's a dispute over royalties or representation or protecting their brand."

knows how best to solve a problem for their clients so they can go on doing what they love to do.

Putting Artists at Ease

A lot of [artists] don't want to talk to their litigator, because it's stressful. Part of my job is to take away the worry. That's consistent with every client, whether it's a singer-songwriter, an in-house counsel for a record label, or a publisher. "You are not to worry about this." My job is to give you peace of mind.

A lot of that comes with explaining the process, projecting confidence, and making sure you earn their trust. Sometimes, I deal with lawyers, so I don't have to explain certain things. Other times, I deal with people who have never been involved with a lawsuit. You have to really start from the beginning and distill it down. That has nothing to do with someone's education. If someone tried to explain to me how to create a song, I would be lost. Everyone does different things. It's just what I do.

Referring Matters to Partners

Venable is a full-service law firm. It has corporate. It has trusts and estates. It has bankruptcy. It has trademark prosecution. It has patent work. It literally does everything. I worked at a litigation-only firm for eight years. Now, not only can I handle litigation matters but also I can refer [clients] to one of my partners.

A client I've done litigation work for is called Love Renaissance, which is a record label. They came to me and were like, "Someone wants to buy a portion of our company." A partner of mine does that kind of work and handled the transaction.

The Danger of A.I.

I keep an eye on some of the cases, because it's obviously new. Technology always poses threats to the music industry. In this instance, it's affecting all aspects of the entertainment industry, not just music but also film and television. That's why the guilds are striking.

If you give A.I. a database of every movie ever made and a few plot points—Die Hard-meets-Pretty Woman—the screenplay is probably not going to be so bad. That's kind of terrifying.

So lawsuits have been filed. But, at some point, technology wins out. It's going to be interesting to see how the industry adapts to these new technologies.

"Heart on My Sleeve"

I had a referral source ask about A.I. because of that song that [sounded like] Drake and The Weeknd. "This is concerning. What's going to happen?" And I'm like, "If something happens to one of your clients, let me know." That example scared a lot of people. I'd like to think there's something special about music that A.I. cannot replicate.

Protecting Your Voice and Image

There's both the statutory law and what we call common law that protects your privacy and right of publicity. To the extent someone tries to use A.I. to replicate [your sound and likeness,] that would be a violation of those rights.

I had a matter that settled before litigation where a prominent company used not only what we call a sound-alike song of a client but also a look-alike of the artist. You had a commercial with somebody who looks just like the artist singing along to a song that sounded just like this artist's number-one hit song. We were able to resolve that before it went to court because it was so obvious.

Register Songs and Seek Legal Advice

Register things with the U.S. Copyright Office, because that gives you a presumption of copyright ownership. And consult counsel before signing any agreement. It doesn't have to be a top-flight firm. I know plenty of attorneys who work by the hour, solo practitioners, who zealously defend the rights of artists.

Dealing With Leaks

I work with record labels that have leaks departments and investigators. It really is a game of whack-a-mole in terms of DMCA takedowns. Discord is one that has been really problematic. It's easier with YouTube or Facebook or Instagram. But there are websites where users are able to anonymously auction off songs. It's tough, because not only are you trying to get stuff taken down and it keeps popping back up but also you're trying to investigate the source of these things.

Understanding the Creative Process

I came to L.A. as a creative. I've seen all phases of the entertainment industry, music as well as film and television. I really understand, appreciate and admire what an artist has to go through and how hard they have to work.

SUSAN HYATT

After a short period with garage-rockers the Pandoras, Susan Hyatt formed the alt-punk band Pillbox in London in the early '90s, and started generating some great press. It should have done; the U.K. lineup of Pillbox was thrilling, both on record and live.

"I formed Pillbox in London during the 90s with two British gentlemen," Hyatt says. "Pillbox was all about teenage angst and the raw feelings that I was still processing."

By 2001, Hyatt had a new project—the new-wave/synth-pop-influenced Stimulator. A musical partnership between Hyatt and guitarist-producer Geoff Tyson, Stimulator represented the more mature side of her musical journey.

Stimulator ended up on tour in the States opening for Duran Duran. Meanwhile, Hyatt found that songs by both Pillbox and Stimulator were being licensed to film and TV. More recently, Hyatt (now based on Nashville) reformed Pillbox with a whole new lineup.

"I try to maintain the authentic Pillbox sound by using the same musical equipment, including my Boss Super Feedbacker and Distortion Pedal, to recreate the '90s experience for those who are too young to have been there."

Pillbox recently released a new album, The Grunge

Chronicles, which compiles their heavier, edgier material ("none of the pop stuff"). Hyatt says that the EP is therapy for her.

In addition to her music, Hyatt provides therapy and coaching for bands and artists.

"When I was featured on the front page of the Wall Street Journal in 2017, as an artist who actually got therapy with my band, I was inspired to become a licensed therapist for bands," she says. "Songwriting is about expressing your emotions and when you write a song you are being emotionally intimate with your audience."

The LEGAL Beat

BY GLENN LITWAK

On January 10, 2024, a group of bipartisan members of the U.S. House of Representatives announced they are considering a new Artificial Intelligence ("A.I.") bill that will address this issue affecting artists. It is called the No Artificial Intelligence Fake Replicas and Unauthorized Duplication Act ("No A.I. FRAUD Act").

The No A.I. FRAUD Act is based on the Senate considering (last October) a draft of a similar act called the Nurture Originals, Foster Art, and Keep Entertainment Safe Act ("NO FAKES" Act) purpose is to protect people's voice and images from A.I. replicas. They state that it targets "abusive A.I. deepfakes, voice clones, and exploitive digital human impersonations." But what are Deepfakes? According to the Merriam-Webster dictionary, a deepfake is "An image or recording altered and manipulated to misrepresent someone as doing or saying something that was not done or said." Often Deepfakes are done with bad intentions, and they can distribute false information.

The Act would establish a new federal "right of publicity" which means it will protect against using someone's voice, likeness, or other personal characteristics without permission. Approximately half of the states (like California and New York) already have a state law right of publicity.

The Chairman and CEO of the Recording Industry Association of America, Mitch Glazier, stated, "The No A.I. FRAUD Act is a meaningful step towards building a safe, responsible, and ethical A.I. ecosystem, and the RIAA applauds Representatives Salazar, Dean, Moran, Morelle, and Wittman for leading in this important area. To be clear, we embrace the use of A.I. to offer artists and fans new creative tools to support human creativity. But putting in place guardrails like the NO A.I. FRAUD Act is a necessary step to protect individual rights, preserve and promote the creative arts, and ensure the integrity and trustworthiness of generative A.I.. As decades of innovation have shown, when Congress (billboard.com/t.congress/) establishes strong IP rights that foster market-led solutions, it results in both driving innovation and supporting human expression and partnerships that create American culture."

While A.I. can be used in positive ways, such as enhancing streaming service and using certain techniques, it has also been used maliciously. Unauthorized imitations of artist's voices have been spreading fast over the last few years on the internet with no penalties. According to Michael Huppe, President and CEO of SoundExchange, "Every day, music artists are being exploited as their creative works are harvested, manipulated, and repackaged without consent, credit, or compensation. The No A.I. FRAUD Act will create a federal property right for likeness and voice while providing real penalties for companies and individuals who attempt to steal and profit off of the intellectual property of music creators."

Five years is an eternity in the music industry, particularly in recent years. In that span of time, popular music often reinvents itself, bands put out a few records and record label executives tap young adults to keep their artist roster fresh.

For newcomer Gavin Magnus, it took that same amount of time for him to get his proverbial ducks in a row before diving headlong in music. But the genre-bending singer doesn't lament the five-year slog, because he's still only 16 years old. So, how did he manage to break through at such a young age? Yup, you guessed it: by creating a viral video that introduced him to millions and millions of YouTube viewers.

"It's funny," he begins. "When I was listening to music in middle school, I always played it through Soundcloud and YouTube. I was never really into those [platforms,] but when I discovered Spotify, I was, like, 'Oh, this is pretty sick.' So, I downloaded Spotify, started streaming all my music on there and became a musician."

"I downloaded Spotify... and became a musician."

His social media presence skyrocketed to such grand heights that Columbia Records recruited the then-12-year-old as the youngest signee in the label's 135-year history.

Even though Magnus and Columbia made history together, their partnership just wasn't meant to be. Instead, the social media star—whose music melds rap and pop-punk—reached a multi-album deal with Los Angeles' Big Noise Music Group in July.

"Pop music with a little bit of rap in it—that's my lane," the vocalist says.

Magnus and Big Noise's arrangement came to fruition after the company's A&R chief, Goldfinger frontman John Feldmann—like Columbia—caught wind of Magnus' towering online presence (and practically incalculable video views). Five months later, Big Noise released Magnus' debut EP, Blurry Eyes, produced by Feldmann (a.k.a. "Feldy") and Grammy-nominated producer K-Thrash.

Having already established himself, Magnus has more decades ahead of him than the vast majority of entertainers or even public figures. So, what's next for the youngster?

"I'm constantly thinking of new ideas," he says. "Me and my mom are always talking about our next steps."

American teens get hella perks when they turn 18 years old. Immediately, they can vote, buy fireworks, get a tattoo without their parents' approval and buy lottery tickets. But those fringe benefits pale in comparison to the bonus that hip-hop artist Tahjer Dunn received when he blew out 18 candles on his birthday cake: a global deal with one of the three biggest music publishers.

Warner Chappell Music Publishing—along with Tim and Danny Music division Stellar Songs—wasted no time giving the Minneapolis rapper, singer and songwriter a vigorous handshake. When Music Connection touched base the prodigy, we half-expected he'd be bouncing off the walls and hard to wrangle for an interview. But the outcome was quite the opposite; Tahjer was so relaxed, he'd give Snoop Dogg a run for his money.

"I've been chill about it," Tahjer said. "Now I just have to put in the work."

The possibility of a publishing deal materialized when industry heavyweights Tim Blacksmith and Danny D heard some of the hundreds of songs that the ridiculously prolific artist already had under his belt.

Hearing Tahjer's tracks probably would have been enough to win over

"If I put in my work... nothing much can go wrong"

Blacksmith and D. But they were no doubt also excited to discover that the rapper is a low-maintenance guy—a breath of fresh air in an industry that is still obsessed with glitz and glamor even though the times of industry excess supposedly died in the '80s.

"I just needed a [recording] setup, since I work best at home, and traveling expenses," he divulged. "D was, like, 'I got you. Just make sure you put in the work.'"

Given Tahjer's superhuman work ethic and how many tracks he's already laid down, D may have laced his remark with irony. Tahjer noted that being under the tutelage of D in particular, along with the other members of his camp, was the impetus for him to put his John Hancock on the paperwork.

"Everything here is family and does a great job," he said of the publishing firm. "I just feel like if I put in my work and make sure my team's on the right page, nothing much can go wrong." — Kurt Orzek

Sisters Rena and Nia Lovelis are veterans of this thing they call "show" and "business." Their entry into the industry began in 2008 when they both were still in middle school. Their debut musical venture was an all-female hard rock band called Cherri Bomb. Over the years they went through various versions of that band, with several personnel changes, alterations in sound and a rebranding as Hey Violet in 2015.

The band cut their teeth on past affiliations with major labels like Hollywood and Capitol Records. After a two or three year hiatus they are back with a strong video and single in "I Should Call My Friends." It's an up-tempo pop-rocker that puts the emphasis on camaraderie and fun. "It felt like that was a really good song to come back swinging with," says Rena. "It was a way to say we're back and we wanna get reconnected. Personally I've dealt with a lot of mental health stuff and I think it's really important to call myself out that I've been isolating a lot. But it's good to connect with fans again and give them new music."

Hey Violet's current signing journey found a comfortable and family-friendly partnership with Hopeless Records. Drummer Nia befriended

"It was like we were dating or something. They just wanted to support us."

a musician closely associated with the label. This fellow musician liked Hey Violet's music and provided an introduction to Hopeless Records' A&R rep Eric Tobin.

"Eric really seemed to get what we were about," says Rena. "Often A&R reps would rather try and mold an artist into what they want rather than what the artist wants to be. Eric listened to us. It was like we were dating or something (laughs). He said he wanted us on their label but didn't push us about it. They just wanted to support us."

At this time the trio was reconfiguring a career plan and direction. But after some minor deliberation they took that fresh leap of faith. "It's one of the best decisions we've ever made," says Rena. "We've gotten support from them that we haven't experienced before. We have a lot of freedom in designing album covers, video treatments and how we wanna create our songs. It feels really, really good to put the reins on what we're doing and steer it with a family behind us that really supports us."

Hey Violet is planning to release a follow-up single soon, with a new album coming in early 2024. - Eric Harabadian

It's awfully hard for a musician to go unnoticed in Las Vegas. As Sin City revolves almost entirely around entertainment, live music venues abound and provide ample opportunities for musicians—even newbies—to hone their craft in front of crowds. It might not be L.A. or New York, but bands can get the attention of music industry executives in Las Vegas way more than in other cities.

A case in point is Crashing Wayward, an alt-rock group assembled in spring 2020. So, why did it take a few years for the quintet to really get off the ground? In the case of Crashing Wayward, COVID gave the up-and-comers a golden opportunity to demonstrate their strength, dedication and durability—even before releasing their first album.

Toiling away on the writing and recording of their first batch of songs resulted in LISTEN!, a record that showed the nascent band was as adept as heritage artists in crafting radio-friendly, cathartic music (Crashing Wayward are rounded out by vocalist Peter Summit, second guitarist

"RFK would invest a lot of time and energy into our band."

David Harris, bassist Carl Raether and drummer Shon McKee).

It didn't take long for authority figures in the music business to not only catch wind of Crashing Wayward but to sign them right away too. The young musicians not only wowed crowds with their musical chops but signaled potential mass appeal by artfully addressing uncomfortable topics like suicide and intolerance with aplomb.

Soon after an associate of RFK Media co-founder Ron Keel presented him with some of Crashing Wayward's work, the industry vet struck a deal with the five musicians.

"He got to know the industry and its pitfalls during his steady career throughout the '80s," Blades noted of Keel, who is also a seasoned musician. "We had another suitor but determined that RFK would invest a lot of time and energy into our band."

The troupe's hard work, combined with Keel's sound judgment, paid off earlier this year when they won Best New Vegas Rock Band honors at the Vegas Rocks! Magazine Awards. With that trophy in hand, the alt-rockers proved they're not out to haphazardly crash the music industry; they're in it for the long haul. - Kurt Orzeck

Peter Martin

Spiritual Sounds

Immersed from age three (both parents were musicians), Peter Martin began classical training on the violin and piano before switching over to jazz. Best known as pianist and Musical Director to Dianne Reeves, Martin toured as a member of Chris Botti's band and with Christian McBride, and performed with Terence Blanchard, Betty Carter, Roy Hargrove, Ellis Marsalis, David Sandborn, and Stanley Turrentine. Credits include recordings with Victor Goines, Johnny Griffin, Wynton Marsalis, Nicholas Payton, Joshua Redman, Rodney Whitaker, and others, performing at the White House in 2011, and a GRAMMY for 2016's Steve Reich.

Martin says music has always been about a spiritual connection. "I didn't realize it until recently, but it always felt like that. If you're part of a religion, you feel joy, meaning, connection with something bigger—and a sense of service," he says. "I always love listening to music and being part of it, but we're very much serving the audience."

Often approached for advice on tour, and receiving video clip requests from students, Martin started a video podcast that grew into online lessons in 2011. After growing demand, he joined forces with colleagues to record material and teach remotely, launching Open Studio in 2015. International members—many without access to a teacher, studying over lunch breaks, or wanting to explore—form a passionate jazz community of over 30,000.

"I had all this jazz education, privilege and access," says Martin. "This was really just putting together video lessons. [I wanted] a community where people can meet, gather, appreciate, learn about jazz, and geek out."

Martin's approach to jazz is refreshingly different. "There is an invitational accessibility, but we didn't dumb down the music," says Martin. "We're trying to do it as well as we can and make it entertaining, but not just entertaining. You can tap your foot to it. If you want to go deeper and listen to it again, maybe you'll find more meaning. We want it to be deep. We want it to be impactful. We want it to be spiritual. We want to elevate you as you're listening."

The key to good music is having guardrails: knowing what you need, with who, and by when. "We can lean into things that not only come naturally to us as jazz musicians," says Martin, "but what listeners find exciting about the genre: improvisation. The more space there is, the more magic can happen." Carter taught him to commit to continual improvement. "I think sometimes in the creative world we get so casual. To have commitment to excellence and figure out how to fold that in with creativity [is] a really magical space. It's got to be exceptional, top-shelf, A-plus work."

Exploring patterns at the piano to see where they take him, Martin moves in and out of seasons of writing, but remains deadline-oriented on projects, conveying a story without words by remaining structural. Including elements of tension and release between the melody, harmony and rhythms, he aims to keep the melody in listeners' minds.

"If you're a songwriter, it's [about] trying to make that spiritual connection with something bigger than yourself in art form, then creating something for people that will uplift their life in some way. The mathematics behind chord changes—it's hard—but a spiritual connection is a lot harder. Musicians and creatives are worried A.I. is going to take over. No—this is a perfect opportunity for us to delineate what we do because people want spiritual connection. They need it."

Inspired by saxophonist Sarah Hanahan's 2019 Kennedy Center performance, Peter Martin & Generation S (2023), features all new music performed live, recorded in one take.

OUT TAKE

Geoff Zanelli

Composer

Website: geoffzanelli.com

Contact: Emilie Erskine, emilie@erskinerpr.com

Most recent: Leo

After studying film music and engineering at Berkeley in the early '90s, composer Geoff Zanelli fired off letters to dozens of composers, offering free work in exchange for experience. Finally, he got a call back from a receptionist—at Hans Zimmer's studio—and talked his way into an internship. Zanelli says it's not as serendipitous as it might sound: "It seems like it was just luck, but it was also the result of some effort; I probably sent out 50 letters, and none of my peers did that," he says. "And I think something like that can still happen today, just through social media."

Now, 30 years later, Zanelli has worked on everything from the Pirates of the Caribbean franchise and animated Disney films to blockbuster dramas and thrillers. "The difference in types of projects was the reason I wanted to be a film composer. I was in bands earlier in my career, and I always thought, if this goes really well, and we do get signed, then you kind of get stuck – you've got to play your hits for decades. As a film composer, I don't. I get to write new stuff all the time. I don't have to look back that often. That was the draw. So when I look for a new project, I really just look for something that's different from what I just did," he says.

To aspiring film composers, Zanelli says any kind of technical skill with computers and samplers will give you a competitive advantage. "I had a really deep technical knowledge, so my demos sounded better than most, which I think set me apart early in my career. It's an ever-evolving thing, and staying on top of that is crucially important. There's this idea of a film composer being someone who's just hunched over score paper, writing music, but it hasn't been like that for decades," he says. "I also still really believe in the mentor relationship, which has been crucially important in my career. Reach out to other composers you admire, and see if you can just get in the room with them."

MUSIC CONNECTION

Tidbits From Our Tattered Past

1994-Arrested Development-#18

Atlanta hip-hop pioneers Arrested Development found themselves on our cover in August of '94. "Basically, when you're up, people always want to be with you and around you, and if you're down, there are gonna be some people who will drop you." We also interviewed Carl Caprioglio of Oglio Records in that issue, and he said, "No one wants to license you something if they think you're not going to pay them." Wise words!

2010-Superstars Of Video Game Music-#34

In November of 2010, Music Connection spoke to four individuals noted for putting their sonic signatures to some of gaming's best-loved and most lucrative series. "The only thing that influences me is the creative direction of the developers and the publisher, and my own ideas about the kind of emotion the music would convey," said Winifred Phillips. We also had a feature in that issue about film and TV placements. "For records, you're trying to reach out to a broad audience with something that resonates," said A&R exec Don Grierson.

Gretchen Parlato and Lionel Loueke

SACRED SYNERGY

ON THE HEELS OF THEIR GRAMMY® AWARD nomination for Best Jazz Vocal Album, Gretchen Parlato and Lionel Loueke continue to make their mark on the jazz scene, while remaining as humble and appreciative of their journey as ever. Born and raised 7,500 miles apart (California and Benin), their creative synergy is pure magic, the result of 23 years of friendship and musical collaboration.

Their individual careers are impressive; Loueke formed West African-influenced jazz trio Gilfelma (alongside Ferenc Nemeth and Massimo Biolcati), is part of Blue Note's Allstar Band, recorded and toured with Chick Corea, and has been touring with Herbie Hancock for over 10 years. He performed on 2007's Grammy-winning album of the year, River: The Joni Letters. In addition to garnering extensive vocal awards, Parlato's stylings appear on over 80 recordings, including Grammy-winning albums with Esperanza Spalding, Terri Lyne Carrington, and Taylor Eigsti. Their combined credits include Wayne Shorter, Robert Glasper, Marcus Miller, Terrence Blanchard, Kendrick Scott, and others. The duo head out on tour to Europe next month.

Juggling touring, teaching, and balancing family life, the duo's Grammy-nominated project, Lean In, has brought them back to where it all began.

Music Connection: You refer to yourselves as musical soulmates, have used each other's music on other projects, and have been connected for so long. What was the inspiration for Lean in?

Lionel Loueke: There's no one else out there I feel so connected to. When it comes to music, it's clear for me. As you said, I play on her album, she plays on mine. We had our own life. We grew as musicians, we've been through COVID. I don't think we could have done it earlier. I feel like everything was landing at the right time.

MC: You [Loueke] wrote two other records during COVID. What made this different? It struck me as so positive, which may be counterintuitive for a lot of people coming out of such a dark space?

LL: Absolutely. We all know what we've been through and Herbie [Hancock] often says on stage that 'COVID has taught us one thing: that we need to take care of each other. Otherwise, we are going to die.' We are one family, you know? For me, it's important to celebrate life, enjoy the moment, not take for granted what we have earned, and do the best we can while we're here.

Gretchen Parlato: I agree. Even the title—Lean In—it's wonderful you feel it's positive and has something joyous, but someone else might hear it and lean into their suffering or pain. That's what it is to me. When you study about embracing your suffering, acknowledging it, sitting with it, and trying to move through it—not pushing it away. Lean In is an offering for ourselves, for each other, to just feel it all. That, to me, was the message of COVID. The whole album was an offering and, in a cool way as artists, we end up creating something we can use as our own healing, but it can also have the effect on other people and listeners. We always feel very lucky, very grateful to be artists. We suffered a lot during COVID, but we were able to tap into something deeper and create.

MC: The way you see that pain and let it pass, as opposed to holding onto it, definitely speaks to Buddhist fundamentals.

GP: It comes up a lot in different readings...leaning into your every emotion like you're holding a newborn baby and saying, 'it's okay, I'm here for you. Let's be here together.' Whether it's amazing or tragic, it's just here, and you're taking care of it. With Lionel and I both being parents, it's a really important, very deep message to pass on to kids to process their own emotions.

LL: I practice Buddhism, so it's a big part of who I am and what I do. It comes through the music, through a way of living. The biggest difference for me compared to 20 years ago was music was everything for me—not anymore. Music is just what I do, not who I am. If I put my focus on who I am, if I can be a better person, then whatever I touch—music being one of them—will be at a good place too.

MC: Does that makes the music deeper or more meaningful now?

LL: Absolutely.

MC: The way you use space really is very deliberate and conscious. What makes you stand out is that you're both conscious on stage. That may be obvious to most people, but I think it gets missed in the doing for a lot of artists. I'm wondering if, because you've both created that space in your own live on some level, that the art is more palpable, or lands differently now?

LL: For me, it's definitely beyond the music—we inspire each other. We play our journey through music. 20 years ago, it was all about the notes; now it's not about that—'nothing is wrong, or everything is wrong.' Be true to yourself and be real. If it's honest, people feel it. They don't need to understand the musical technology that jazz musicians usually focus on.

MC: [Lionel] You're known for moving in the 'brave space'—letting go of control and creating. The two of you do that in such a trusting way of surrendered symbiosis, and so much is improvised. Where does that trust come from?

GP: It's been 23 years since we met and started playing together. I'm not sure if we could define it back then? When Lionel mentions 'it's not who I am, it's what I do'—I remember at UCLA, even before meeting Lionel, that Herbie Hancock said that in a lecture. I took it in, but I didn't really get it. We were working so hard for our music—it was all-encompassing. Now I understand and that's why this project makes sense, [why] we waited this long. There's more for us to say. There's a higher, deeper level to connect on. There is an unexplained, wonderful other world that both of us individually fall into when we play, when we create. We're deep in that individually. When it connects the two of us, I completely lose myself. It's transformative from the first to the last note of a gig as a performer, let alone a listener. I don't know why, I don't know how, but it's an amazing connection to have with somebody. We're playing off each other and the energies in surrender. It's hard to explain. It's hard to teach. I think you just have to live it.

MC: When I saw you at the Bowl (2023's Hollywood Bowl Jazz Festival), it was very conscious and deliberate energetically, but it's as if you weren't there physically? You're almost not really aware—it's just happening. Talking to you before the show, you're there, but in that moment of creation, it's almost like the two of you disappear and there's this thing that just comes through you?

GP: I love that that's what it was. We need someone like you to explain.

LL: Yeah.

GP: It's a beautiful thing. That's really what it feels like—especially at the Hollywood Bowl. There's 18,000 people there and we're a very intimate duo project, in this giant environment...

MC: The way it landed was something very intimate and powerful.

LL: Thank you. I'm going to add a few things about that. Connected to the title, we lean on each other. There's a trust, a high listening, and no judgment—we go with the flow. The mistake is a big part of what we do, too. Nothing is perfect. We don't want to play perfectly—it's not music. We challenge each other. It's not that we sat in a comfort zone for 20 years. I don't know where she's going to go and I trust her. I go on that journey completely blind. That's the beauty of what we do. We don't question it, we just go for it and, because we move listening and trusting each other, we find our way back home. There's no preconception. You don't get it wrong in progress, you get wrong because you don't know where you are. There's no judgment.

GP: There's no failure. It's just an unexpected opening... and Lionel's never wrong.

LL: Oh, yeah. You know.

MC: That's why it is so fresh-sounding.

LL: Absolutely. If you saw us tonight and you saw us tomorrow, it's going to be a completely different show.

MC: As a listener, it's meant to be an experience, to be authentic and evolving.

LL: For us, too. If we do the same thing, we get bored; how you can expect people listening not to get bored? It's not the perfect music, it's not the cleanest, but it's natural. That truth for me goes with mistakes—everything is there.

MC: What has been the most surprising outcome from the record?

GP: The Grammy nomination.

LL: That's what I was going to say!

GP: People say this all the time, but it's so much about the nomination. I'm so happy—he [Loueke] lives in Luxembourg, so to [have] come all the way to L.A. for the Grammys... I love that we got to be there together with our families. It's all about the acknowledgment and celebration of that day, no matter what happens.

MC: What does the process look like when you're creating together?

GP: With this project, it was a combination. We sent each other different ideas, whether complete or just a little section that needed work. We weren't sitting in the same room writing together, but we could go back and forth and add to each other. There was a lot to piece together and when we finally got together in person, it was rehearsal the day before, then two or three days in the studio. I'm not sure we've [ever] written a song together in person?

LL: We've done interviews and improvised together. With collaborations you [Parlato] send me, I add chords and already have the record, then you come up with the melody.

GP: That's the process and it's worked really well. You have your space to focus in between, to sit with things. When I've been writing in a room with somebody and it's kind of immediate, I just want to sit—sometimes I need that space. I think it's worked well. There are plans to continue to write but we make do with what we have. We had improvisation [from] Bernice Travis on bass and Mark Jonah on drums. They would play for half an hour, record, and then I went to listen. I picked up interludes and clips and then wrote melody and lyrics. It's a collaborative effort.

MC: The way you're writing together speaks to your creativity on stage because you're leaving it room to breathe that might otherwise have been lost. Maybe because there's no container, there's the idea of infinite possibilities, nothing is defined?

GP: That's so true. I realize that's why it's worked so well—that's how my brain works. Oh, that's really cool. Let me sit with this. Let me work with this. I want to do this on my own in private—I'll come back and offer something. That way of writing is interesting and became popular during COVID [since] we all had to work remotely.

MC: The shows are much more exciting because it's the first time the two of you are playing it live together.

LL: That's true—and many people don't know Gretchen is a record producer.

GP: I don't even know that I...

LL: [To Gretchen] You should you should be producing. [When recording,] you are so into the music that you need to hear from somebody from outside. You start focusing so much on yourself instead of the whole piece of music. We didn't have any producer for this—we did it on our own and everything she [Parlato] said was right on point—double my voice here... That is a quality of production—not everybody has it.

MC: Your joint commitment is to the sound and the creation—there's no ego so it allows for space and room for it to breathe. It's not about trying to prove anything.

LL: Exactly right. That's the point.

MC: So, with all his expansiveness, have there been any poignant moments that stand out, that took it to another level?

GP: The Hollywood Bowl was a pretty out-of-body experience. That was a high for me. I really enjoyed the Blue Note in New York City for a couple of nights. My family was able to sit in [and] I love the memories of that, the intimacy of the club. Most of our history is in New York City together, so there's an energy of the room and a real connection.

LL: It's hard to describe. Something happens I couldn't put a word on it. You cannot control it.

MC: You're both incredibly humble and grounded, and a lot of that comes from your belief systems. Are there any practices you commit to that keep you from getting swept up?

LL: My chanting is the first thing I do in the morning for 15- 20 minutes. It sets me up for my journey and keeps me calm. I don't chant for myself, I chant for people suffering. That has kept me going.

GP: We chanted together on tour and that was really special to do before shows. In a technical sense, think of it as a warm up. You're vocally connecting, but there's an emotional and spiritual aspect. I wake up very early, diet keeps me well—and exercising daily. I've started reading some sacred text every morning and taking notes. That process helps my brain to take it in. It's that balance of creative time, independent time to be healthy, and balancing family giving and connecting. When we're home with family, it is very different from touring, so we have to find balance and appreciate both.

MC: You're both so open about the creative process, while also deeply committed to self-evolution. There's a beautiful parallel that creates space to create. Would you say fate has played any role in the journey?

GP: Even on the first day... we met at our audition for the institute and were the last two to audition. Of all the people that auditioned, the order that people were in there... no one else was there. Something put us in that place at the same time.

LL: I truly believe things happen for a reason—good or bad. You meet somebody and it doesn't work out the way you were hoping, but there's a reason behind it. We learn from every move we cannot control, we appreciate, and we move on if we have to. There's a reason behind it because it's too much to be random.

MC: Do you feel there's a resurgence in jazz?

LL: It's always been there - what has changed is how people value [it]. In Europe or Japan, it's always been there. In the U.S., it's in the air. I remember the first time I went to Starbucks in Boston and heard Coltrane. I mean, where are you going to hear Coltrane in Starbucks?!

MC: I feel a shift happening: people are craving a real and connective, genuine feel to music.

GP: We've been in the scene and creating—you don't feel it go up and down. As we age, there's a whole other generation doing it. It's amazing. Jazz has always been a beautiful thing where, as you get older as an artist, you become even more appreciated. To hear our favorite artists up to the last breath, it's all amazing and beautiful, We're in the right genre.

LL: People are tired of hearing the same thing over and over. To be a jazz musician, people get a chance to hear something different than what they hear all the time—that has respect.

MC: What do you think jazz means in 2024?

GP: Would you say jazz is becoming genre-less?

LL: People are just paying more attention. Dizzy [Gillespie] played with Charlie Parker and did a lot with South American musicians, brought Afro-Cuban music to jazz. Today, we have different tendencies from India and places that brought their culture. People paying attention can hear, but people who aren't don't realize the spirit of it, the improvisation.

GP: We come from years of study, but what we've created has always been untraditional. There's room for the super purist, if that's what you feel. It's refreshing to hear when someone's really in the tradition and continuing that. But I think it's beautiful, and there's room for, genre-bending. [In] the world of music, there's room for everything.

MC: What advice would you give for anyone pursuing jazz performance?

LL: Be true to yourself. Every person is different. I get so happy when I'm playing my instrument and something I've been working on for so long is coming out—that's my joy. You have to believe in yourself; try new things, don't copy

GP: It's all about what's genuine and honest to who you are. You want your art to be an extension of who you are as a person, encompassing everything about you. The sound on your instrument should just be effortless—the same way we speak is the way you should sing or play. Don't try so hard to imitate. Ella did it. Let's just listen to Ella if we want Ella. What can you do? Everyone has a story, something to share, so it should be a relief to realize what's already inside. Let that out, and not try to grab things. Everything already exists, it's just the unveiling—and that can take many years. The beauty is the journey, not the final destination. I get to be an artist, it's a really beautiful thing. This is the way to be happy in life and have less attachments and suffering.

LL: As a musician, this is what we think, but there's a whole industry a little against creativity. The labels... it's not new. The industry has to do the work to look for people who have something else to say. You don't know how much you're going to make if it's new, but go for a new sound. If it doesn't work, at least you are part of the creativity instead of going for something you know and want to make money out of? Most of the time that doesn't work because it's another copy.

- While her first name is of German descent, Parlato is not German. Her mother thought 'Gretchen' sounded like something from a fairytale. Parlato has Jewish heritage and her middle name, Sarah, is in honor of great grandmother, Sarah Steinpress.
- Loueke's first guitar cost him $50 and took a year of savings. Soaking his strings in vinegar to keep them clean, he could rarely afford to replace them when they broke, so he used bicycle brake cables instead (he frequently needed a carpenter to repair the guitar neck).
- Parlato's grandfather, Charlie, played trumpet (Kay Kyser Big Band, Tennessee Ernie Ford, Lawrence Welk) and sang tenor parts on The Flintstones and Jetsons theme songs, as well as harmonies on Parlato's favorite: Sam Cooke's "You Send Me."
- As a teenager in West Africa, Loueke breakdanced to Herbie Hancock's "Rockit," knowing nothing of Hancock's music or the significance he would later have on him as a professional musician (he studied Hancock later at school in the Ivory Coast and in Paris).
- Parlato has three cats who act as her alarm clock, waking her up at 5:30 a.m. sharp. Every. Single. Day.
- Bassist for Frank Zappa, Al Jarreau, Don Preston, Barbra Streisand, Henry Mancini, Paul Horn, Gabor Szabo, Buddy Rich, and Don Ellis, Dave Parlato, is Gretchen's father (known for television and film recordings).

WELCOME TO THE 11TH EDITION OF ALL YOU NEED TO KNOW!

AND FOR YOU SPINAL TAP FANS, “This one goes to 11!” (If you have no idea what the hell I’m talking about, Google it).

I have lots of new goodies for you since we last got together, such as the dominance of streaming, why artists have more power than ever in history, the emergence of music created by artificial intelligence (some argue that’s been going on since the beginning of stoner rock), how TikTok has majorly rocked the music world (and whether that’s good or bad), the recent mega-sales of music catalogs, music in Web3/metaverse/NFTs, and of course updated numbers and practices.

Let’s talk about the professionals you’ll need to maximize your career and net worth. The main players are your:

- Personal manager
- Attorney
- Business manager
- Agency
- Groupies

With respect to number 5, you’re pretty much on your own. As to the others, let’s take a look:

Business Philosophy

Before we talk about the specific players, let me share a bit of personal philosophy. (If “share” is too California for you, try “Let me tell you some of my personal philosophy,” or the New York equivalent, “Yo, listen up, I’m talkin’ to you.”) Take a hard look at some facts:

- You are a business.

Even though your skills are creative, you’re capable of generating multimillions of dollars, so you have to think of yourself as a business.

- Most artists don’t like business.

This isn’t to say you aren’t good at it. Some artists are unbelievably astute in business. However, those folks are the minority, and whatever their love and skill for business, their love and skill for creating and performing are much bigger. So even if you’ve got the chops to handle your own business, it’s not always the best use of your time.

- Success hides a multitude of sins.

This is true in any business, from making widgets to making music. If you’re successful, you can get away with sloppy operations that would bankrupt you if times were bad. For example, putting all your pals on the payroll, buying lots of non-income-producing assets (such as houses, jets, and other things that cost you money to maintain), as well as an overindulgence in various legal and illegal goodies, can easily result in a crash and burn if your income takes even a small dip, much less a nosedive. You can make more money by cutting costs than you can by earning more, so the time to operate efficiently is NOW, not later.

- Your career is going to have a limited run.
- Don’t take offense at this—“limited” can mean anything from a year to 50 years, but it’s going to be limited. In most other careers, you can expect to have a professional life of 40 years-plus, but as an entertainer in the music business, this rarely happens. And the road is strewn with carcasses of aging rock stars who work for rent money on nostalgia tours. So take the concentrated earnings of a few years and spread them over a 40-year period, and you’ll find that two things happen: (a) the earnings don’t look quite as impressive; and (b) this money may have to last you the rest of your life. It’s certainly possible to have a long, healthy career, and to the extent you do, the need for caution diminishes radically. However, even the best entertainers have slumps, and very few have really long careers. So it’s best to plan as if your career isn’t going to last, then be pleasantly surprised if it does. Setting yourself up so that you never have to work doesn’t stop you from working all you like—it just becomes an option, not an obligation.

*“Don’t get discouraged—
it only takes one enthusiastic person to get the ball rolling.”*

Who’s on First?

The first person on your team is almost always a manager or a lawyer. In your baby stages, the manager is not likely to be someone in the business; it’s more likely a friend or relative with a lot of enthusiasm. While this can be a major, your friend or relative is not likely knowledgeable in the business, nor will they have any high-level relationships. So if you have an inexperienced manager, or if you have no manager at all, a music industry lawyer can really help.

It’s much easier to get a music lawyer than a manager. Why? Because the time required of a lawyer is minimal compared to the time a manager has to devote. The manager is expected to help you with songs, image, bookings, babysitting (you, not the kiddies), etc., but in the early stages, a lawyer only has to spend a few hours wrangling the labels and structuring your deal. It’s the lawyer’s knowledge and relationships—not their time—that count.

You’ll of course need a manager and/or a lawyer even if you don’t go the record-company route, and the criteria for hiring them (which we’ll discuss in the next chapters) is exactly the same.

Agents in the music business are primarily in booking live gigs, and for bigger artists, endorsements and the like. It’s hard to get a major agent at the early stages when you’re not earning much, but you might get someone local or a smaller agency (unless you have a manager with clout). Your manager will guide you to the right person and the right time to bring them on board.

A business manager (the person who collects your money, writes your checks, oversees investments, etc.) is usually the last on board for the opposite reason of why the lawyer is one of the first: It’s expensive (in terms of staffing and labor) for a business manager to take you on, and new artists need a lot of work just to keep financially afloat. Another reason they come on last is that very few business managers are willing to take a flyer with a totally unproven, unsigned artist; the business manager’s potential upside is not nearly as great as a personal manager’s or agent’s, but they have to run up substantial expenses from the beginning. But don’t sweat it. Until you have some decent money coming in, you don’t need a full-fledged business manager. A good accountant can take care of your tax returns and answer basic questions.

The Search

Where do you find warm bodies to begin assembling your team? Well, start with the age-old ploy of asking every human being you know for a recommendation. Talk to people involved in music, even if it’s only your high school choir’s piano accompanist. You can lead yourself into any unknown area by diligently following your nose, and the music business is no exception. You’ll be amazed how many things fall into your life when you open yourself up to the possibilities. The only frustrating part is that the people you really want don’t have time for you in the beginning. (Be assured, as soon as you’re successful, they’ll fall all over you and say they “knew it all along.”)

The major players are almost all in Los Angeles and New York, with a good number in Nashville, though of course that leans heavily to country. I don’t mean to say there aren’t qualified people in other places—there most certainly are—but the music industry is centered in these three towns, and the people who live there usually have more experience. On the other hand, major managers are increasingly popping up in other places. For example, I’ve dealt with managers of world-class artists who live in Atlanta, Austin, Miami, Vancouver, Philadelphia, and Boston. However, the better ones spend a lot of time on airplanes visiting Los Angeles, New York, and/or Nashville.

Here’s some more ideas for developing your list of potential team members:

Read interviews with music industry figures and note the names. In addition to the industry sources above, here’s some major consumer publications (meaning they’re geared to fans, as opposed to trade publications that are geared to businesspeople), in alphabetical order:

- Music Connection (musicconnection.com)
- Pitchfork (pitchfork.com)
- Rolling Stone (rollingstone.com)
- Spin (spin.com)
- Vibe (vibe.com)

• XXL (xxlmag.com)

Watch for quotes, stories, or blurbs about music industry people online, on radio, and on TV.

Try these online places:

• TAXI (taxi.com)

• Music Business Registry (musicregistry.com)

• RecordXpress (recordxpress.net)

• Songwriter 101 (songwriter101.com).

Some artists list the names of their professionals, together with their jobs, on their websites, on the info page of Facebook, or in tour programs.

Or simply Google artists you respect, together with “manager” or “agent,” to find out who’s behind the magic.

Using the above and anything else you can think of, write down the names and develop a “hit list.” Just keep moving forward—follow any lead that seems promising. Once you assemble a bunch of names, prioritize who you want to contact first. If you’ve heard any of the names from two or more sources, the odds are you are on to a person who is “somebody,” and he or she should move up in priority. Also look for the professionals surrounding people whose music you admire and whose style is similar to yours. While this is less critical with lawyers and business managers, it’s important to make sure that agencies, and especially personal managers, handle your kind of music. For example, the agent who books Wayne Newton is not likely to book Lil’ Wayne, and I guarantee you they have different managers. On the other hand, you may be surprised to find that acts just as diverse are represented by the same agency (with very different individual agents). And the legal and business management lives of different artists are a lot alike. Rock ‘n’ rollers (like Green Day, the Rolling Stones, etc.), rappers (like Drake, Juice WRLD, Jay-Z, etc.), and divas (like Adele, Beyoncé, Barbara Streisand, etc.) all have similar needs in music publishing, record royalties, touring, merchandising, sponsorship, etc.

Once you’ve prioritized your list, start trying to contact the people on it. It’s always better to come in through a recommendation, friend of the family, etc., even if it’s only the person’s dry cleaner. But if you can’t find any contact, start cold. You can try calling people on the phone, but expect a lot of unreturned phone calls, or at best to be shuffled off to an underling. That’s okay—talk to the underling. If you get someone on the phone, be brief and to the point because these folks are always in a hurry. It’s a good idea to rehearse your rap with a friend in advance.

You can try emailing folks, with a story about yourself and a link to your music. Again, be short and straightforward—good people are always busy, and you’ll be lucky to get five seconds of their attention. If you can’t grab ‘em fast, you’re off to the digital trash bin. Repeated emails to the same person help get their attention, and may even have the subliminal effect of making your name sound familiar if anyone ever asks. But it can also be annoying and get your name into their spam filter, so don’t overdo it.

You could also use that old-fashioned thing you may remember called the “U.S. Mail.” Since so few people do that anymore, a physical letter might even get more attention. In this case, you might include a CD or a USB stick (though people don’t always have CD players and they’re wary of viruses on USB sticks, so also include a link), pictures, hundred-dollar bills, and anything else to distinguish yourself. (I once had someone send me a recording stuffed inside a rubber chicken. For real.) If you’ve gotten any local press, that’s a good thing to add. Use a yellow highlighter so they don’t have to search the page for where you are. And just like the emails, be short and sweet, or you’re off to the round file.

However you approach it, expect a lot of unanswered emails and unacknowledged letters. Don’t get discouraged.

If you successfully snag someone’s attention and they politely (or not so politely) blow you off, ask who they would recommend. This is valuable for two reasons: First, you’ve got a lead from someone who’s actually in the industry. Second, when you reach out to the recommended person, you can tell them “So-and-so” told you to contact them. If “So-and-so” is a big enough name, it should at least get your email or phone call returned. (Maybe.)

Someone, somewhere will nibble, and you can parlay it into real interest by being persistent. All the superstars I’ve known have heaping helpings of drive and they’ll continually hound people to further their careers. So hang in there and keep following up, despite the discouragements thrown in front of you. Virtually every record company in America passed on Taylor Swift, the Beatles, and Elton John, so don’t expect people to be any smarter about your music. And don’t get discouraged—it only takes one enthusiastic person to get the ball rolling.

Who Does the Work?

Ask exactly who is going to be involved in your day-to-day work. It may not be the person you’re meeting with.

This isn’t necessarily bad, but you should be aware of it from the start, and you should meet the people who will be involved. All professionals use staff people, some to a greater degree than others. In some firms, the staff people divide and move around like paramedics, so the people you’re meeting today may be gone in six months. Other places are more stable. So ask, and also ask your references.

Fees

Never hesitate to ask what someone is going to charge you. I know it’s an uncomfortable subject, but bring it up anyway—you can be in for a seriously rude surprise if you don’t. And when you do raise the topic, be wary of someone who gives you a vague answer. (If you really can’t stomach a fee discussion, have another team member do it for you.)

Personality

It’s a myth to think any one personality style is more effective than any other (assuming you don’t hire a wimp). Screamers and table pounders, if they’re smart and knowledgeable, can get a lot out of a deal, but no more than those who speak quietly, if they’re smart and knowledgeable. Some people work with a foil, and some with a saber. Both styles can be effective.

Remember, you’re hiring people to guide your professional life, not to hang out on the tour bus. It’s nice if you strike up a friendship with your professionals, but it’s not essential. (However, with your personal manager, I think you need at least a solid rapport, if not a true friendship.) I’m not suggesting you hire someone you really dislike, or someone who has the personality of a salamander, but I am saying these folks don’t have to be your pals. In fact, some amount of distance is often helpful. Just as doctors can’t operate on their own relatives because they’re too emotionally involved, one of the main things a professional does is bring some objectivity to your life.

There’s a story about Genghis Khan, the great warrior. In the midst of a pivotal battle for his empire, with thousands of troops on each side, an aide went into Khan’s tent and was surprised to find Khan himself sitting there. The aide said, “How can you be in here? The fight is at a critical point and the troops need your command.” Khan replied, “I found myself getting angry over a turn in the battle, and I can’t think straight when I’m angry. I came in here to cool off before deciding the next move.”

Think about that. If even ol’ Genghis had to detach from his emotions to do the best job, who are you and I to do any better? When I have legal problems, I hire a lawyer. This may sound strange to you, but I get emotional about my own problems, and I don’t trust my judgment when I’m too close to the situation. So I hire someone who isn’t. In sum, a bit of distance from your professionals is not a concern, but you should feel comfortable enough to have an easy communication with your team. If you think you’ll dread talking to a particular person, look for someone else.

Decide Now—Confirm Later

Make a decision reasonably quickly, but confirm it slowly. In other words, once you’ve hired somebody, continue to watch them carefully (to the extent you can stand to do it). The fact that someone came in with rave reviews doesn’t mean they’ll be right for you, so consider them “on probation” until you’ve seen enough to merit your trust. And don’t just take another team member’s word that it’s working. Force yourself to follow their moves in the beginning, and you’ll earn the right to relax later. Remember: No one pays as good attention to your business as you do.

Universal Audio UAFX OX Stomp Pedal

Universal Audio has over the last few years made significant moves to re-invent themselves not only as a manufacturer of professional-grade audio interfaces, plug-ins, and pro audio equipment but also as a manufacturer of high-quality guitar pedals and effects.

One of the standout products for guitar players that Universal Audio came out with a few years ago was the OX Amp Top Box, a desktop reactive load box and speaker emulator which has become a studio standard for taming the output of your favorite tube amp down to a manageable volume allowing you to go straight to front of house or direct into your audio interface, all the while retaining the full tonal characteristics of your amp, with or without a speaker cabinet connected.

As a follow-up, late last year Universal Audio released the OX Stomp, a pedalboard friendly stomp box sized version of the OX Amp Top Box incorporating essentially everything found in the OX Amp Top Box minus the ability to function as a load box. The OX stomp is for your pedal board what the OX Amp Top Box is for your tube amp. It is designed to go in your signal chain after your favorite amp-in-a-box. Universal Audio makes a number of great options including the just released flagship UAFX Lion 68 Super Lead Pedal. Placing the OX Stomp into your signal chain gives you the ability to send a realistic equivalent of what otherwise would be your traditional amp cabinet and microphone configuration, along with user configurable studio quality effects.

The OX Stomp is designed to be the missing link between your pedalboard amp and front of house by giving you just the emulation and tone shaping capability of the OX Amp Top Box. The only thing you cannot do with OX Stomp is plug your speaker output directly into it. Whether you are a fan of virtual guitar amp technology or not, there is no denying the ability to realistically recreate the sound of a tube amp on a pedal board is here to stay. The available amp emulators today (not just from Universal Audio but in general) are getting better and better all the time, so much so that it is now viable even for pro level players to leave their amp and cabinet at home and go virtual.

The top panel of OX Stomp is based around the option to select six user-selected "Rigs." An OX Stomp "Rig" is a complete sound with cabinet, mics, room, ambience, and multiple effects. The rest of the OX Stomp's top panel controls are designed for real time adjustment of virtual microphones, room size, speaker drive and output. The two A/B footswitches allow you to select up to four Rigs in real time. The back gives you a carefully curated list of virtual speaker options, 1 X 12 to 4 X 12 to choose from as well as options for microphones and effect. The end result is a "Rig," which as mentioned earlier, is a virtual recreation of a guitar speaker cabinet including microphone placement, room ambience and effects.

OX Stomp is not designed to be an IR loader, it is a speaker emulator and is as far as I know the first one ever designed to fit on a pedal board. Note: OX Stomp only allows you save your Rig configurations from the factory provided options. There is no provision for loading or managing your own IR's. There is no desktop App available to fine tune your Rigs as there is with OX Amp Top Box. The free downloadable iOS App, which most people will likely access via their phone, does give you a number of options to tweak your Rigs. You can select additional options for room mics and speakers along with EQ and effects including reverb and delay. All the available effects including EQ, Reverb and Delay effects are super high quality as you would expect from Universal Audio. User configured Rigs can be saved as one of the six rigs available to be selected from the from the OX Stomp Box.

As OX Stomp is essentially a performance tool and is designed to be mounted on your pedalboard, I think I understand why Universal Audio decided to go with a Bluetooth-enabled App as opposed to a desktop App for the OX Stomp. That said, I personally found the Bluetooth connection on the OX Stomp, as well as on the Galaxy Space Echo pedal to be somewhat unstable (i.e., it periodically crashed), and the pedal had to be completely reset for the Bluetooth connection to be reestablished. Note: the Bluetooth pairing button on the back of OX Stomp is tiny (it is a little bigger than the width of a paperclip). Trying to reset the Bluetooth connection in the middle of a gig would be problematic). Hopefully, a firmware update will address this issue.

That comment aside, I found the cabinet emulations and effects on OX Stomp all sounded great and convincingly realistic. The OX Stomp is a big step toward being able to leave my traditional amp and cabinet setup at home without any compromises in sound quality.

The Universal Audio UAFX OX Stomp pedal is available now for $399.00 MAP.

Find out more at uaudio.com/guitar-pedals/ox-stomp-dynamic-speaker-emulator.html of OX Stomp has stereo inputs and outputs and a USB-C Port which is there solely to allow you to update the OX Stomp firmware. Further fine-tuning of your Rig can be done via a free, downloadable Bluetooth-enabled App, which

Allman Brothers Band

Manley Field House, Syracuse University, April 7, 1972

Allman Brothers Band Recording Company
Producers: The Allman Brothers Band, Bert Holman

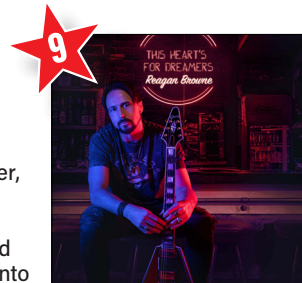

ABB is legendary, so any show of theirs is bound to be a stunner. That said, one performance shortly after Duane's untimely passing captured the Southern rockers truly feeling the blues. Could there be anything better than smoking hot versions of "Statesboro Blues," "One Way Out," and "Ain't Wastin' Time No More" from when those classics were new? Perhaps epic takes on "In Memory of Elizabeth Reed" and "Whipping Post." More than half a century later, the material and playing remain unmatched. – Andy Kaufmann

Reagan Browne

Symphonic Distribution
Producer: Zach Allen

Browne is a Texas-born singer-songwriter, with a rich versatile vocal style and a penchant for indelible hooks. Over the course of three albums he's injected hard rock, progressive and bluesy flourishes into his songs. But Grammy Award-winning producer Allen has helped unearth the culmination of that experience through the lens of Americana and country rock. For this EP Browne gets in touch with his southwestern roots on "Little Town America." But this whole release resonates. – Eric Harabadian

The Immediate Family

Skin in the Game

Quarto Valley Records

Producers: Danny Kortchmar, Waddy Wachtel, Steve Postell, Russ Kunkel, Leland Sklar

This album is no last hurrah, but rather a heartfelt hello! Fresh from their award-winning documentary these (formerly) unsung heroes are the toast of the town. And it's about time! These are the guys that provided support to the stars and the soundtrack to a generation. And they've still got something to say, with bold rockers like "Nobody Wants You" and "Confusion," the socially pungent "Party at the Graveyard" and the lusciously harmonic "Catch You on the Other Side." – Eric Harabadian

The Last Dinner Party

Prelude to Ecstasy

Island Records

Producer: James Ford

English indie rock band The Last Dinner Party deliver a refreshing symphony of sounds with their debut full-length album Prelude to Ecstasy. The release flourishes thanks to its ambitious theatrical songwriting approach and rich harmony of brass, woodwind, harps, trumpets and strings. Frontwoman Abigail Morris oozes charisma. Her delivery has a distinctive range and personality. The Last Dinner Party are making their mark in the rock world with their strong debut. – Jacqueline Naranjo

Sue Foley

Live in Austin, Vol. 1

Guitar Woman Records

Producer: Mike Flanigin

Recorded live at the Continental Club in 2023, this is an adventurous Sue Foley. The singer-songwriter-guitarist trades fearsome licks with fellow axe wielder Derek O'Brien on original rave ups like "New Used Car" and "Walkin' Home." But she also balances straight up blues, country and classic rock with equal grace and style. Check out her letter perfect take on Bob Dylan's "Positively 4th Street" or Jodi Williams' tangy "Hooked on Love." The finale of Cheap Trick's "High Roller" is worth the price of admission. – Eric Harabadian

Dale North

Perfect Selection Dale North Vol. 2

Scarlet Moon Records

Producer: Jay Napolitano

Game composer Dale North's compositions have graced scads of video games, including Ray's the Dead and River City Girls. This pixel-centric collection, the second in a series, is a tour de force of button-mashing nostalgia made to order for old-school fans. While an impressive display of North's versatility, there's a lack of cohesion that makes the album feel more like a demo reel than an artistic statement. – Andy Kaufmann

MGMT

Loss of Life

MGMT Records, Mom + Pop

Producers: MGMT, Patrick Wimberly

The indie of darlings MGMT have long-evolved from their Oracular emergence, scratching a new artistic itch with each release. Unfortunately, this translates to alien and inaccessible tracks overshadowing the stellar gems of their catalog. This is not to say they are hard to find, "Mother Nature" and "Bubblegum Dog" are some of the band's poppiest tunes in years, glistening, glam takes on '90s alt. This contrasts the folk-tinged title track, and the spacey echo chambers ("Dancing in Babylon"). – Joseph Maltese

Kevin Burt & Big Medicine

Thank You Brother Bill:

A Tribute to Bill Withers

Gulf Coast Records

Producer: Kevin Burt

The award-winning Burt can weave a tale that richly resonates genuine and authentic. Hence, his tribute to one of the greatest soulful storytellers in R&B/pop music is a perfect fit. Bill Withers' classics like "Ain't No Sunshine" and "Lean on Me" get an added blues bonus in the way Burt and his band boil the songs down to their essence. There's a welcome inclusion of deep cuts, too, like "Let Us Love" and "I'm Her Daddy." – Eric Harabadian

Brooklyn duo FIIZ have absolutely nailed this electropop business. All of the ingredients are present and correct, from the hypnotic rhythms and pulsating bass lines, to the vocals that work beautifully both in isolation or combined. Songs such as "Night Cap" and "Lungs" grab the listener by the feels before carrying them off like some sort of dance-pop pegasus. The production is immaculate—crystal clear—while the beats are insistent and super-dance-friendly. But really, FIIZ is all about the songs. Try not to dance along to "Hyperventilate," even if you're just sat at your desk. That's an exercise in futility. Better to let these ladies take over your head.

There's not a lot of information out there about Flocko Tiel, but no matter, we're going to base all of our options on his submitted music anyway. What we have here is a rapper with a distinctive delivery and an overall chill vibe. The music in the background is trance-y and entrancing. There are jazz elements that are very welcome, some beautiful piano, and the tracks are meticulously constructed. Over that, Flocko Tiel delivers his stories. There's no fronting here; this is simply a talented musician offering up journal entries in the form of inventive, intelligent and thrilling hip-hop. These songs would sound great under the sun at a summer festival.

Gishika-P has had a number of names over the years, including (past and present) ritual, DS Stix and ritualguyofficial. He's a producer from Canada who, he says, "uses VOCALOID, Synthesizer V, UTAU, Alter/Ego, and sometimes NEUTRINO and CeVIO" to make ambient and electronic music. There's a strong video game, anime and manga vibe about the artwork surrounding his music, and that makes sense because songs such as "Cathedral" and "I Found the Blue" would make for an awesome score. That said, even stand-alone, this music is fascinating, haunting and quite lovely. Layered like an onion, you hear something new with every spin.

Country and R&B aren't necessarily genres that one would place directly together, but then we have to ask, why not? At their best, both are expressive, authentic and dripping with raw emotion. That's certainly the case with B.E.A.R., real name Sammie Cooper, who has a voice that could tame rabid dogs, so sweetly smooth it is. Some of the lyrics lay the "good ol' boy" country icon on a little thick, but that's ultimately forgivable because the melodies are so strong. We don't know if he's picked the B.E.A.R. name because of the Disney Country Bears, but there's nothing mechanical about this promising artist.

Julius James is popularly known as Fresh Caps, and he's a Nigerian singer, songwriter, rapper and dancer who says that his life is "musical to the max." Fair enough. That vibrancy and energy certainly comes across in songs like "Birthday," which is a joyful musical demand for attention. The blend of cultures is glorious here, James' voice smooth and rich when singing, gleefully packed with attitude where rapping. The beats aren't particularly original, the melodies aren't going to raise any roofs. But the love that James clearly has for his craft shines through. He's a talented chap, and there's enough here to suggest that we're going to hear a lot more from him.

You might think, when pushing "play" on a band with a name like ShitNoise, that you're head is about to be assaulted by a cacophony of, well, noises. The Monegasque group describe themselves, in part, as noise rock, and there are certainly noise rock elements in there. But the melodies are overt, the tunes insistent, and we can hear a lot of electro-post-punk influences (think Girls Against Boys). What they are is a lot of fun. There are sounds on the remarkably infectious "Seasoning" that we simply can't put a name to. Is that a mic'd-up food processor? Crushed metal? We don't know, but it sounds awesome.

"Barbershop," with its clicking fingers intro, feels like the opening number in a musical about barbershops. "Junior has a wild idea to bring the mullet back," she sings at one point. We can't endorse mullets, but it's still a great song. "My Ryan" is a heartbreaking song about her brother who passed away, and it's a beautiful tribute. The Belasco Theater Los Angeles, CA

Web: dirtyhoney.com

Contact: herfitz@mac.com

Players: Marc LaBelle, Vocals; John Notto, Guitar; Justin Smolian, Bass; Jaydon Bean, Drums

Material: Dirty Honey is rude, hard and loud, to say the least. Hard rock oozing blues, rock and metal was blasted from the start, throughout the Belasco Theater with no signs of letting up. Reminiscent of a young Led Zeppelin, they rocked the venue all night long with hints of Deep Purple, Pink Floyd, Rainbow and Guns n' Roses emanating out of their pores as they played to a sold-out crowd.

Musicianship: The musicianship was very good. Notto, Smolian and Bean made a great team. The tunes are fit, well-rounded and well written. They were performed with excellence in mind and made a very good backdrop for LaBelle to do his thing with the vocals. Smolian, Notto and LaBelle teased and poked at the crowd as they posed for pictures for while churning out the chops, with barely a note missed.

Performance: The performance was excellent. Dirty Honey had every seat in the house filled with enthusiastic, excited people that came to party and have a good time. The Belasco crew has an amazing lighting and visual show and they pulled out all the stops for Dirty Honey. But even if the band had not had the help from the venue, they still would have had the audience in the palm of their hands; their show is that good.

Summary: Dirty Honey is a band that's fun to watch. The music was good and the fans are enthusiastic; and combined with the high energy aura that the band puts out, it's a win-win for everyone. They are all over the internet and if you haven't heard of them, what rock are you living under? Formed in 2017, they were the first unsigned band to have a single, "When I'm Gone," top the Billboard Rock Songs chart, as well as being iHeart Radio's On the Verge Artist. Touring since 1990 and opening for every notable rock act out there, Dirty Honey is a band not to be missed. - Pierce Brochetti

ERENE MASTRANGEELI

Contact: hbeatrice@empktmedia.com

Web: erenemusic.com

Players: Erene Mastrangeli, Vocals, Guitar; Bernice Brooks (AKA Boom Boom), Drums; Dawn Drake, Bass; Julia Chen, Keys; Alicyn Yaffee, Electric Guitar; Sean Stefanic, Guest Speaker.

Material: Over the moon with the release of her first full album, Erene Mastrangeli showcased her newest collection of songs. Influenced by artists like Joni Mitchell and Bonnie Raitt, her material blends folk and pop as she explores themes of love, unity, and female empowerment. "Let's Take It Slow," focuses on grabbing those special moments in between the chaos of everyday life: The fences have been mended/dishes put away/The day was good/the work was hard/...Let's take it slow/let's take it easy/come on let it go/come on sit beside me. On a more solemn note, Mastrangeli grapples with a cause she is passionate about. Championing gun control after the Pulse nightclub shooting back in 2016, she penned the song "Love, Shine," which is the title track from the album: Stop all the violence/the massacre of life/stop with the guns/when you kill someone you die.../love, love please come down/love, love shine on us/shine all around. Written in 6/8 time the song plays like an anthem while pulling at our heartstrings. She wrapped up the set with "What Is Love," a perfect way to end, expressing something we all share; our desire to love and be loved.

Musicianship: Mastrangeli's vocals are not pyrotechnical but more even keeled and in step with her songwriting. Her all-female band further promotes her philosophy of women fulfilling their potential. While they are a tight unit and good support for her, some standout moments from drummer Brooks added further spice to the sound.

Performance: The most striking thing about this artist is her affable manner and her ability to connect with the audience. Though not every song is as memorable as others, she has the knack of drawing you in. She even made space to address her commitment to gun control. Before singing the song, she brought Shawn Stefanic from Gays Against Guns, on stage, to speak to the audience about the organization, a moment which added more dimension and depth to the overall performance.

Summary: Erene Mastrangeli is clearly an artist of substance who is true to her feelings and causes. She presents her material with authenticity and sincerity and while some songs stand out more than others, she is on her way to shaping a meaningful career. The accompanying video to "Love, Shine," is also out now. - Ellen Woloshin

Sunset Tavern Seattle, WA

Contact: @sandriderseattle

Web: sandrider.bandcamp.com

Players: Jon Weisnewski, Guitar, Vocals; Jesse Roberts, Bass, Vocals; Nat Damm, Drums

Material: Stalwarts of Seattle's heavy music scene, Sandrider writes bombastic, earsplitting songs with abstract melodious slants. The trio smashes together thrash-induced sludge (Melvins, Unsane) with hardcore screams (Earth Crisis) and killer math-edged punk beats (NomeansNo and Botch) to create a distinct metal-based sound of unadulterated musical ferocity. Sandrider—named after the Fremen worm-riders in the novel Dune—pull lyrical inspiration from Frank Herbert's dystopian desert saga, but also angle into more personalized modern-day mythopoeic tales.

Musicianship: Sandrider's fast and loud musical technique is incredible. Lead vocalist and guitarist Jon Weisnewski's explosive holy-hell voice naturally glides over gilded power chords and blistering guitar riffs with impeccable accuracy. Bassist and vocalist Jesse Roberts' low and boomy bass sonics—reminiscent of Tool (Justin Chancellor) and Soundgarden (Ben Shepherd)—help define Sandrider's maximalist sound. Drummer Nat Damm cannot be ignored, as his super-charged blast beats, oversized kick drumming and animated fills provide a foundational layer that rides in strides with Sandrider's marvelous loud rock sensibilities.

Performance: Sandrider hit the stage and immediately tore into the superfast and strikingly melodic "Alia" with reckless abandon. After drummer Nat asked for less bass in the monitor, the three longtime friends bantered between themselves for a bit before asking the audience if it was better to have "less bass or more guitar" in the mix. Sandrider continued their ruthless rage with songs from their recent 7" release on Alternative Tentacles—the heavenly heavy "Aviary," followed by the full blast "Baleen." A scorching set concluded with the resounding "Children"—the first song the trio wrote together—and the excruciatingly fast and strident "Champions."

Summary: Sandrider is an outstanding hyper-brutal noise rock-leaning band in the AmRep vein. The band's off the wall, riff-laden, head-banging performances are ones not to be missed. Look for Sandrider playing shows in the PNW area and if their track record remains consistent, another round of new material soon! - Megan Perry

Viper Room Hollywood CA

Web: nlovescourage.com

Contact: music@nlovescourage.com

Players: McKenna Rowe, Vocals; Jake Bergman, Bass; Joe De Sa, Guitar; Harrett Smith, Drums

Material: Nature Loves Courage is a rock & roll outfit putting out unique tunes with subtle hints of Led Zeppelin, the Eurythmics and Talking Heads. They mixed the music with rock & roll, blues and jazz and the results are very good. The tunes start out straight forward and drive, rock & roll style, and then veer off into another lane, say, jazz, and then veer right back. It made for a very good rollercoaster ride.

Musicianship: Excellent musicianship all around as Rowe led the music with very good vocals that not only showcased her talent, but accented her very sexy outfit. Singing while directing traffic, and even so much as bringing her own background vocals, she crooned exceptionally well for a fun, animated crowd. De Sa was great adding layers of sneaky sounds to the mix as his "whacka, whacka's" were placed ever so perfectly on rhythm guitar. A nice, juicy melodic solo would have been nice to change things up a little bit but life isn't fair all the time, is it?

Performance: The performance was good. Although Rowe seemed to run out of gas towards the end, Bergman was there to keep things flowing in a funky direction. Bergman was on it from the get-go. "No slouching allowed" is written in his book. Every chop, every groove, every rhythm was so "on." All the grooves were melodic and enjoyable and each was played with energy and enthusiasm that kept the ball rolling for the whole band. Together with Smith, they made the rhythm section happen for Nature Loves Courage.

Summary: Nature Loves Courage was very enjoyable to watch and listen to. Can't say enough about Bergman and Smith as they had the small, but energetic crowd at the Viper Room dancing, grooving and wanting more. The vocal melodies were very good as well and the guitar's extra input on rhythm gave this band a very good rating. Tunes like "All of The things," "Dismantle" and "Dark Horse" take you down the metal path, while "Players" and "Frequencies" finesse and inspire you to dance. Be sure to check these guys out at all your favorite platforms.

Elevate Your Next P.I.T.C.H.

Elevate your next pitch and ensure all the essential elements are included by using this "P.I.T.C.H." framework. When it comes to pitching someone, you need to ensure you have all the key information, outlined in a detailed and easily digestible flow. I've compressed 13 years of pitching my clients—what worked well to capture attention and position my clients in the brightest, most interesting light—and created this "P.I.T.C.H." framework for you to think through before you click "send" on a pitch.

P: Person
I: Information
T: Timely
C: Captivating
H: History

Person: Ensure this is, in fact, a match for the person you're pitching. Don't pitch a publicist about your music if you're trying to get a publishing deal (this happens a few times a year to me). Similarly, don't pitch country music to a rock-focused publication. If you're pitching an A&R person at Warner Music on your rock band, make sure it's not actually an A&R for Warner Nashville, which would be the country division of the label. The point is, be hyper-focused on who you're pitching to ensure it's a fit. This will increase the odds of receptiveness.

When pitching journalists, knowing these three aspects about them will massively help increase the likelihood of coverage opportunities:

- Know their genre affinity; investigate what type of music they generally write about before you pitch them.
- Is there a topic you see as a thread connecting a lot of their features (like LGBTQ+ artists or a focus on a new music scene in a specific city, etc).
- Does the journalist only do certain types of features (exclusives, premieres, interviews, album reviews, etc...)? You need to know this so you can properly ask for the type of coverage they are assigned to in your pitch...i.e. don't ask for an album review if they only do breaking news coverage!

Information: All key details and assets on what you're trying to promote such as release dates, song titles, what the music sounds like, etc., need to be presented in a digestible flow. A lot of times, artists will reach out to us, and not include details about a new release they're preparing for, no links to hear the music or watch videos, no links to past media coverage or social media accounts. When you're reaching out to someone for the first time, it might be your one and only shot at grabbing their attention. Make sure you provide them everything they need right up front.

Timely: You need to be pitching with proper lead time. Ideally you can also connect to a timely, newsworthy angle. By understanding who you are pitching yourself to, you'll have a better understanding of when to get in front of them. For example, if you're pitching the media because you have a new single or album, make sure you're pitching them months in advance, as they need that lead time. A publicist or marketing agency cannot help you on a project unless you start working with them months ahead of the planned release. Also, maybe your new song is about the loss of a loved one due to cancer. As an example, you might consider releasing it in October, which is National Cancer Awareness Month. It would provide you and your team a deeper story to tell as it's anchored to a national month of awareness.

Captivating: Make sure you're telling a story with colorful wording and a good flow. Based on my experience you really only have 2-3 sentences to truly capture someone's interest to investigate you further—so you want to be as captivating as possible with your storytelling and hooks. Be clever, and short, with an email's subject line. But don't go so far that it comes across as spammy. When in doubt, personalize your pitch to show that you put the extra time into your outreach and that this is not just a copy/paste blast that's being sent to hundreds of people at once. Yes, it takes more time, but the odds of someone paying attention to you will increase.

History: After you hook the person you're pitching with the captivating details, then hit them with more background information.

Typically, at Milestone Publicity, we craft our pitches to flow with the most important information first and then move into the background, history and past accolades of an artist or band later. It's all important information to include, but if you're a new artist don't lead with where you are from or what inspired you to become an artist, instead save that information for AFTER you've hooked someone with a captivating story angle, release dates, links to the music, etc.

MIKE GOWEN has established himself as one of the go-to media relations executives in the industry. Not confined to any one musical genre, he's become known as an invaluable utility player on an artist's team as he currently ignites his 14th consecutive year in public relations. In January 2019, Gowen founded Milestone Publicity, further building upon his already lengthy resume of being hands-on with the PR campaigns for icons and emerging talent.

The firm has now become one of the top sought-after PR companies in the field, representing Rock & Roll Hall of Famers, GRAMMY Award-winners, CMA Award-winners, multi-platinum selling artists, and Songwriter Hall of Famers, in addition to Emmy and Golden Globe Award-winning talent.
